

The Kansas Murders.

Cherryvale, a small town in southern Kansas, has been the scene of a most horrible case of wholesale murder. About two miles from the village is located a tavern called the Bender House, heretofore occupied by two brothers of that name, and their wives. On the 9th of March last Dr. W. H. York, of Independence, sat out on horseback from Fort Scott, for his home, which he never reached. He was tried to Cherryvale, but no further. This circumstance and other incidents aroused the suspicion of the people. It was discovered that the Bender House had been abandoned by its occupants, and a search revealed a most sickening discovery, unequalled perhaps in the history of the country. By means of a sharp-pointed rod of iron, which was thrust into the ground in rear of the building, suspicion was aroused, the result of which was the unearthing in various places of no less than nine human bodies, and among them that of Dr. York. The skull of every one of them had been crushed in by the murderer's hammer, showing that a system of murder and plunder had been going on, perhaps, for years. People for hundreds of miles are flocking into Cherryvale, and enormous rewards are being offered for the arrest of the murderer. Dr. York, it is said, had a large sum of money on his person, and that he stopped at the house either to rest, or to get a drink of beer. While waiting for either he was dealt the blow which killed him in an instant. Every one who knew him liked him. Six of the bodies have been recognized, as follows: Dr. York, H. Longenecker and child, identified by his brother-in-law; W. F. McCarthy, soldier of Company, 129th Illinois Volunteers; D. Brown, identified by a silver ring on his finger, and John Geary, of Howard county, recognized by his wife. The throats of all had been cut except that of the little girl, whose body was unharmed, leading to the supposition that she was thrown in and buried alive. Over three thousand persons were on the ground. The excitement all over the country is intense.

A Frightful Calamity.

A fearful casualty happened near Nazareth, Pa., on Monday evening. Mr. Lichtenwalder owned a lime kiln about half a mile from that place. It had been burning for some days, but on the day mentioned was found to be choked. Mr. Lichtenwalder undertook to clear it. He was assisted by John Haldeman, Lichtenwalder, being a long iron rod, went to the top of the kiln, and forced it down into the lime. While leaning over the opening he was overcome by the sulphurous fumes arising, and fell headlong into the kiln. His companion was for an instant stricken dumb with horror. Recovering himself he sprang to the top of the kiln. Looking into the crater he saw Mr. Lichtenwalder lying in the lime, struggling madly. Haldeman forgot in his anxiety the cause of Lichtenwalder's fate, and leaped far over the brink of the kiln, endeavoring to catch hold of him. He, too, was overcome by the poisonous gases, and fell into the furnace. Theodore Walter was passing by, and saw Haldeman fall. He ran to the opening and quickly lowered a ladder into the kiln and shouting loudly for assistance went down where the men were lying. They were not in the fire, but on the hot lime. Walter did not know that there were two men in the kiln. He seized the body of the first one he reached, that of Lichtenwalder, and started up the ladder. Before he was half way up, overcome by the poisonous air, he fell back unconscious, with Lichtenwalder in his arms. His cries had been heard, and several persons hastened to rescue him, reaching the spot just as he fell back with Lichtenwalder. He was taken out in a few moments, and the pure air soon restored him to consciousness. The bodies of the other two were soon after raised, but every effort of physicians failed to restore them to life. The scene about the kiln when Lichtenwalder and Haldeman were brought out was a fearful one. They were both influential men, and the heads of large families.

A VALUABLE INVENTION.—An inventor in Knoxville, Tenn., has patented a device for cleaning the mortar from old bricks, very much more rapidly, cheaply and effectually than it can be done by hand. One of these machines is now in use in the burnt district of Boston. The brick are carried on an apron to a hopper, into which they are fed one by one, falling and first. A descending bar pushes the bricks through a narrow way surrounded on each side by one, falling end first. A descending bar pushes the brick through a narrow way surrounded on each side by steel chisels pressed against it by springs, which clean the mortar from the four long sides at once. As soon as it has passed through a horizontal bar washes it through another set of chisels which clean the ends, and it drops out ready for use. The springs adjust the chisels to the various thickness of the bricks. Bricks are cleaned, except on the ends, as readily as whole bricks. The chisels are so set as to keep themselves ground. The machine is so powerful that an extra thick brick will have a shaving scraped without stopping it, and so easily that the work can be done by hand although the use of steam power is contemplated. Another advantage is that bricks which would inevitably be broken by a blow on the side are preserved whole. Running at a slow rate, the bricks are cleaned at the rate of thirty-five or forty a minute, which is about as fast as they can be placed in position.

A SHIPWRECKED APOLLO.—A colossal marble statue of the "Apollo Belvedere" has just been placed on exhibition in the window of G. W. Carleton & Co.'s publishing house, under the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. This fine figure was purchased by Mr. Carleton two weeks ago, on the island of Bermuda, at an auction sale of works of art saved from the submerged hull of the Italian ship Charlotte, which was wrecked last March on the sunken coral rocks of the dangerous reefs. "The still vexed Bermoothes." This statue of Apollo (weighing more than a ton), after lying under water for some time, was with great difficulty fished out by a submarine diver and native wreckers of the island, and landed on the shore, with the loss of only a finger or two and slightly damaged by salt water and iron rust.

Gov. Dix has refused to sign the New York Local Option Bill, unless beer and cider are exempted from its provisions. It is said concerning this bill that the House passed the bill for luncheon, expecting the Senate to take the responsibility of defeating it. The Senate added to the bill amendments and sent it back to the House to be killed. The House unkindly adopted the amendments and passed the bill, thus throwing the responsibility again on Gov. Dix, who accepts it and refuses to sign the bill.

GENERAL SUMMARY.

In the death of Chief Justice Chase, the country is again called upon to mourn the loss of one of her highest officials. Mr. Chase died in New York at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Wm. S. Hoyt. Up to Monday evening, when he received his friends and conversed with cheerfulness, he appeared to be in his usual condition of good health. He had come to New York from Washington to visit his daughter, and with the purpose of proceeding thence to Boston. There was nothing in his condition on Monday evening when he retired for the night to indicate that his end was near. On Tuesday morning at the breakfast hour, Mr. Chase was summoned to the meal. A servant was sent to call him, but no response being returned to the servant's rap upon the door the door was opened and Mr. Chase was found peacefully slumbering. He awoke shortly afterwards, and was in the act of dressing when he was seized with an apoplectic attack. In spite of every effort to restore him, he remained in this condition of stupor until the hour of ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, when he ceased to breathe. It will be remembered that several years ago the Justice was attacked with partial paralysis, from which he never fully recovered. He was, however, fully competent to perform, as he did, his duties as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and of late he seemed to be in the enjoyment of complete health. He had in contemplation, when thus stricken down, a visit to Colorado for the benefit of his health and from the recreation from the cares of official life.

The Hon. Oakes Ames died at his residence in North Easton, Mass., at 9:38 P. M., Thursday, May 8. His disease was apoplexy complicated with pneumonia. Mr. Ames was born in Easton, in 1804, and early devoted himself to manufacturing pursuits, in which he amassed a large fortune. He has represented his district in Congress for the past ten years. With his brother Oliver Ames, he took and fulfilled large contracts in constructing the Union Pacific Railroad, and has been the subject of much vituperation in the newspapers on account of his connection with the Credit Mobilier scandal.

Discoveries of silver ore in paying quantities are reported in Putnam county, West Virginia, on the lands of Mr. Henry Pike. The story of the discovery is curious. Mr. Henry Pike was mining for coal, and after going in from eighty to ninety feet found a vein of what he supposed to be black-band iron ore. (Some samples of this ore taken from the outcroppings of the vein were taken to his office, where they remained some time. The late Mr. N. Pike, happened to see these specimens while on a visit to the discoverer, who was his brother, at once pronounced them to be silver ore. Several of them were thereupon placed in the hands of different assayers, and were found to yield silver in various proportions ranging from $35.64 to $123.42 per ton.

On Tuesday afternoon last 1 o'clock, a terrible explosion occurred in the Drummond Colliery, Pictou county, Nova Scotia. Two managers and forty men were in the pit at the time the explosion took place, and were utterly consumed in the flames. Hundreds of miles around rushed to the scene of the disaster. Mothers, sisters, relatives and friends crowded around the burning pit, and gave utterance to their deep distress and mourning so as to be heard for a great distance off. It was a scene that would melt the stoutest heart. Every effort was made to rescue the men, but without success. At last accounts the fire was still raging.

P. T. Barnum has recently imported, a saddle tapir or hippopotamus. This animal, the first of the species ever brought to this country, is seven feet long four feet in height, weighs 1,500 pounds, is a native of Sumatra, and was obtained at a cost of $11,000. Mr. Barnum has just made another valuable acquisition to his museum in a pair of crabs, which he has just received from the first of their species ever brought to America. They are about the size of a large Guinea fowl, weighing ten pounds each; are of a beautiful lavender color throughout, and their heads are surmounted by a row of fine, soft feathers, from which they derive their names. The birds are natives of Java and are valued at $500.

"Pop" Tighe the alleged murderer of Mr. Goodrich, of Brooklyn, N. Y., is still confined in prison and closely guarded. The police have been warned against conversing with reporters concerning him. Should they they will be dismissed from the force. Notices have been sent to Lucette Myers, Samuel Roscoe and others of the postponement of the inquest. A day has not been designated for resuming the investigation.

It is reported that the contract to build the bridge in Dixon, Ill., which recently gave way, causing a terrible loss of life, was obtained by bribing four Aldermen. One of the Aldermen who is named as having accepted a bribe from the bridge contractor had a daughter killed by the falling of the structure.

John Stuart Mill, the great English writer on philosophical and social questions, died on Friday, at Avignon, in the south of France. His death will be felt as a great loss by educated men all over the world.

It is said that the stock holders of the New York Tribune, when they put up their new building, will leave Horace Greeley's sanctum exactly as it was when he died, so that it may in future be a sort of journalistic shrine.

A despatch from Berlin pronounces to be without foundation the report published in the London morning papers that an attempt was made to assassinate the Emperor William, at St. Petersburg.

The sums of $192 from New York for "non-payment of income tax" and $100 from Philadelphia for "sins of omission and commission," were received by the U. S. Treasury on Monday.

The President announces that he will not nominate the successor of Chief Justice Chase until Congress meets in December; so that the Senate can at once act upon the nomination.

The widow of the late Major-General John E. Wool died suddenly on Wednesday, at her residence in Troy, N. Y., at the age of eighty-six.

It cost Martin, the New York lawyer, who recently buffeted Jay Gould, $200 for indulging in that luxury.

Captain D. T. Chamberlayne, one of the six hundred of the charge at Balaklava died recently in London.

Senator Sumner has procured a divorce from his wife on the ground of desertion.

Smoking cars have been introduced on the Third Avenue line in New York.
